Gaitonde's work sells for ₹26.9 cr, highest for Indian artists

INDIA
September

Gaitonde's untitled 1982 painting, created during the peak of the health care emergency, has fetched a record ₹26.9 crore at an auction. Each of his recent live evening paintings, in the style of modern Indian Art, are among the top five most expensive works ever sold by an Indian artist.

The health care emergency painting, depicting the artist's precise, delicate technique, which was sold for ₹20-30 crore, is one of the top three most expensive works by Gaitonde to be sold in India.

Also contributing to the impressive total sale value of ₹54.2 crore, was Bhupen Khakhar's "Tradesman" (1986), a significant painting that was auctioned for the first time. It achieved the second highest value, selling at ₹3.72 crore. Ram Kumar's "Composition" was another highlight of the sale. Doubling its lower estimate, the 1958 work sold for ₹2 crore.

"The painting marks a significant turning point in the artist's career, when his work began to transition from the figurative towards abstraction," the auction house said in a statement.

Among the top five lots was also K H Ara's Untitled work dating back to the 1940s. An unusual, humanistic portrayal of a group of labourers playing cards, the painting sold for four times its higher estimate at ₹1.2 crore.

A later geometric work by S H Raza, "Om" (2007) fetched twice its lower estimate at ₹1.92 crore.
