Bengaluru resident Rio grew up considering a computer his best friend. Last year, he realised that his dependence on gadgets was making him depressed and anxious, and affecting his relationships.

"I had become so insular living my life online that I had lost the ability to connect with people," Rio says. This January, he decided to reset his relationship with technology and checked into a 12-day digital detox programme at Healing Hideaway, a retreat run by therapist and life coach Bindiya Murgai at Ketti Valley in the Nilgiris. "It was excruciating to be deprived of technology, but slowly, it started to get easier," says the 24-year-old. "I am still learning how to create meaningful human relationships."

A growing number of people are opting for programmes and holidays that force them to take a break from their devices and balance their use provide reservation in promotions.

However, it said if they wished to exercise discretion and make such provision, each state had to collect quantifiable data showing backwardness of the class, inadequacy of representation in government jobs and ensure that such promotions did not impact efficiency.

Consumer affairs and food minister Ram Vilas Paswan has maintained that "untouchability and not backwardness" was the reason for SCs getting reservation. He has also maintained that there was no evidence to suggest that Scheduled Caste and Scheduled Tribe officers were less efficient and SCs/STs were under-represented in almost all government jobs. "These issues will be placed before the apex court to apprise it of ground realities," he said.

Pawan, a Dalit, was in Ranchi to showcase achievements of the central government on completion of four years in office.
